Once, there were two worms, Green and Slither, who lived in Indiana. They really wanted to go to Kentucky, across the Ohio River, to attend the annual "Thunder over Louisville" airshow.

Their excitement continued to grow as the event day was approaching. They got their backpacks ready and filled with leaves as they started off their journey to the Louisville Water Front Park by the Ohio River.

They slithered and slithered, until they got tired. They happen to see their friend, Webs, the spider along the way. Green and Slither asked Webs to help them get to see the Thunder over Louisville. Webs made them a glider by connecting blades of grass and tying them up with her web strings. The worms got on the glider and glided away to event.

Soon enough the worms fell down and the glider crashed by the Ohio River. Slither got an idea, he quickly climbed on a plant, chopped off a stem and made a boat out of the leaf. They continued to row, until they arrived at the Water Front Park.

The worms got scared to hear the loud planes in the airshow and tucked their heads underground. Later, they set up their picnic sheet and filled their tummies with fresh leaves. It was very hard for Green and Slither to roam around as all they saw were hundreds of people everywhere. They got really scared when Green was about to get squished under a big giant boot of a passerby.

Luckily they found a safe spot next to a rock. By this time, fireworks had already started. They were beautiful, huge, and sparkly but sounded like blasts to little worms.

Finally, it was dark after a long day and the worms did not know when they fell asleep under the rock. They dreamt of gliding, flying planes and fireworks. Louisville is beautiful, and "Thunder over Louisville" is so much fun!!
